CONTEXT

- During 1999 Roma Mahala displacement occurred due to the complete destruction of the settlements.
- Protracted displacement of ~ 8,000 Roma, Ashkalia and Egyptian individuals within camps, or the region or in Western Europe.
- From 2000 until 2013, numerous individuals from the Roma, Ashkali, and Egyptian communities returned to Kosovo*, some voluntarily and some forcibly to the unsustainable housing solutions.
- Tense political and security environment in North and South Mitrovicë/a.
- Historical prejudice and difficulties in achieving a satisfactory level of integration into Kosovo* society in terms of equal access to public services and opportunities for socio-economic development at the individual, family and community levels.
- Collapsed economy- limited employment opportunities and low levels of income.
- Health and living conditions in relation to environmental issues such as overall pollution owing to improper waste management.
- Exposure to lead contamination- many families were temporarily settled in camps in North Mitrovica, located near the Trepça complex, a large mining site for lead and other heavy metals, which caused to almost 90% of the children having elevated lead levels in their blood.

CHALLENGES FORESEEN

- Rigid traditional norms and failure to manage community resistance to change.
- Limitations to the sense of community, social separations based on ethnic, tribal, clanship, political or religious considerations impact this sense of community negatively
- Particular attention paid to support electing new leaders, facilitate the setting-up of committees for particular purposes and stimulate the organization of women and youth.
- The mobilization of women was of particular importance, especially in the context of developing appropriate responses to the needs of children and adolescents.
- This strategy is seen as essential in avoiding the risk of dependence on external assistance and the enduring lethargy and de-motivation that can result from it.
- Staff involved have to be sensitively aware of the concerns and feelings of the community members and to respond to these with respect and patience. It is particularly difficult when the needs expressed by community members cannot be matched with available external resources.
- The task of building the self-confidence and the capacity of communities to make groupings and achieve positive outcomes is a time- and resource consuming process.
- This project with its comprehensive approach has confronted difficulties because it is a time-consuming practice that does not automatically harvest quick or visible outputs.

Lessons Learnt

- Participatory approach is the best way for a successful implementation of the project.
- Effective communication and transparent decision-making between all concerned actors and stakeholders should be ensured.
- Engagement of local and central authorities was also crucial for project launch and longer-term prospects.
- Targeted support for young people, boys and girls from the communities constituted an investment in future generations: young people from these ethnic groups who are successful in the employment market send a signal to those who follow them that they are welcome and that they have brighter future.
- Promotion and reinforcement of rights, obligations and engagement of municipal authorities and civil society have been crucial for project longer term prospects.
- DRC with its partners came to conclusion that, despite the fact the localization agenda is likely to add value and enhance the effectiveness of support efforts in some contexts, imposing it regardless of context dynamics is likely to produce unsatisfactory results for the effective delivery of support to people in need of direct assistance.
